Two Great Roads to Become One

Two long-time neighbors and friends with strong mutual interests — the Norfolk and Western and Virginian Railways — will become one system in the first merger of major, independent railroads in modern times, just approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The bigger, stronger and more efficient Norfolk and Western will have two principal objectives: first, to provide continuously better service to the communities along the lines of the merged railroads, their industries and businesses, and to shippers of the nation; second, with an enlarged and strengthened industrial development department, to go all out in a vigorous, intensive program to attract new industries to the expanded territory of the six progressive states it serves.

The merger of the two railroads will make the Norfolk and Western one of the financially strongest and most efficiently operated trunk lines in the United States, with excellent connections to the four points of the compass. This strategically located rail system has 2,747 miles of road, 5,870 miles of track . . . nearly a billion dollars in assets . . . 81,000 freight cars — more freight cars per mile of line than any other railroad in the United States 250 miles or more in length . . . the nation's newest and most modern fleet of diesel locomotives . . . up-to-date signalling and communications systems . . . huge Tidewater terminals at the Port of Norfolk on famous Hampton Roads . . . and many other top-notch facilities.
